

CONTACT US | COMPETITIONS | ADVERTISING

Get our newsletter, kiwilink

Enter email here

GO

HOME NEWS CALENDAR COLUMNS BUSINESS SPORT LIVING KIWIANA PROPERTY MIGRATION RECRUITMENT TRAVEL

Review: NZ singer Claire Egan and a London La Traviata

Joseph Hoyer

16 Feb 2012

As a child, one of life's mysteries for me was that people didn't burst out into spontaneous song and dance acts. It happened on the big screen and television with remarkable alacrity but real life just never seemed to correlate with the MGM studios or Covent Garden.

The Merry Opera Company brought that childhood sensation back to me on Saturday night through their small setting production of La Traviata – how I wish I were a tenor named Al.

La Traviata is one of the world's biggest operas - perhaps the biggest. And New Zealander Claire Egan's voice is suited to the lead role of Violetta in this burlesque setting of The Fallen Woman. The Kiwi soprano brings a lick of fire to Violetta, her lyric coloratura and acting chops garnering a great deal of empathy from an intimate gathering above The Gatehouse, a North London pub.

Churlish I know, but if there is a weakness to Ms Egan's performance, it would lie in balancing the vocal gymnastics required of the role with an English libretto; occasionally it is difficult to make out her diction in this English language version of La Traviata. But this is not just Claire Egan's downfall; at times the entire cast struggled with that balance between enunciation and the score, a translating librettist's nightmare.

Kiwiphiles will be delighted to note the other New Zealanders in the La Traviata cast. Composition student Oliver Brignall obtained his Masters at Canterbury University and is now studying for his Ph.D at Brunel University. He gives a credible performance as showman Gaston. Paloma Bruce, ex-Victoria University, is also a London based singing teacher when not involved in productions.

For many opera lovers, La Traviata means big, lavish sets. The Merry Opera Company make do on a very limited budget. Setting this opera in modern London and the burgeoning burlesque scene adds the x-factor that a big budget could otherwise gloss over.

The scenes set in the La Traviata club have more energy than the apartment scenes, as one would expect from burlesque versus domesticity, but the simple set designs that work for the club look awkward elsewhere. Librettist and stage director Kit Hesketh-Henry was given a big task to bring La Traviata into a more intimate and budget friendly production. London burlesque works very well. Doing something as equally liberating with Violetta and Alfredo's love nest needed some thought but was overlooked – a slick, designer minimalist Canary Wharf apartment, perhaps? Something that really would quickly chew through Violetta's cash supply, surely an important plot point.

La Traviata as performed by the Merry Opera Company has a lot of positives going for it. High levels of energy and talented leads plus a London burlesque angle make the trip to Highgate for this small budget production very worthwhile. Grabbing a glass of wine from the pub beneath the theatre feels like a great way to ease into the evening.

This production is a great opportunity to reacquaint yourself with – or be introduced to - Verdi's master opera in an intimate atmosphere and with a recession-friendly price. Claire Egan is worth the price of entry alone and the addition of so much young talent in the cast is a welcome bonus.

The Merry Opera Company continue to perform La Traviata at the Gatehouse until Saturday, 3rd March before touring the production through the UK. The cast is on rotation so check which singers are featured before booking if any particular singers are of interest.

Verdict: a solid production well worth the trip to Highgate. See it now.

- Where: Upstairs At The Gatehouse, Highgate Village. N6 4BD. <http://www.upstairsatthegatehouse.com/>
- When: now until 3rd March, 2012.

Click for a larger image

Claire Egan in La Traviata. Photo: Merry Opera Company

Robin Bailey and Claire Egan. Photo: Merry Opera Company

Claire Egan and Matthew Quirk. Photo: Merry Opera Company

Claire Egan as Violetta. Photo: Merry Opera Company

Related articles

Scots audiences like NZ director's staging of lightweight opera Living Singer set for northern tour Living SONG FOR CHARITY News

Follow us on...

Living BROUGHT TO YOU BY

Progress.

Make an appointment to meet our Executive Principal in London on 5 July 2012. admissions@kristin.school.nz

Progress with vision, integrity and love | www.kristin.school.nz
338 Albany Highway, Albany, Auckland | Ph 09 415 9566 | Fax 09 415 8695

Kristin

The key news BROUGHT TO YOU BY

kiwilink

New Zealand's film star landscapes

2 Jul 2012 Arts

Over the past decade, New Zealand has developed a reputation as the perfect backdrop for big-budget movies. Kiwi director Sir... MORE

1948 OLYMPIC TEAM INSPIRATION FOR LONDON UNIFORM

2 Jul 2012 Olympics 2012

The New Zealand Olympic Committee unveiled its team uniform for the London Olympic Games this evening with a nod to our proud sporting... MORE

Speakers' delegation visit boosts NZ – Europe ties

29 Jun 2012 News

New Zealand's political links and historical ties with Europe will be invigorated by the upcoming visit to the continent by a... MORE

Search the site

GO

Your Wedding in the Famous Marlborough Sauvignon Blanc Region

Marlborough Vintners Hotel Exclusive Winter Wedding Packages five star luxury boutique vineyard hotel set in 6 acres of beautiful grounds located in the Blenheim countryside, New Zealand the heart of Marlborough's Wine region.... read more

Check out the latest jobs in NZ

If you are thinking about returning home - is this your dream job? If not, keep an eye on the latest news on the employment market in NZ. www.nznewsuk.co.uk/recruitment